Mass-murder will not be the consequence of 'bail-in', it is the intent

The CEC's latest New Citizen newspaper charges that the British financial oligarchy have implemented the "bail-in" plan of shutting down economic systems by confiscating deposits, not so much to save their banks, as to kill most of the world's population:

Just like the people of Cyprus, Australians and much of the rest of the world's population will soon see their bank deposits confiscated and themselves plunged into not merely poverty, but mass starvation and death. Supposedly, all this is necessary in order to bail out the hopelessly bankrupt, London-centred world monetary system. But that's just the excuse. Prince Philip and Queen Elizabeth II have openly, repeatedly proclaimed their intent to kill some 6 billion of the world's 7 billion presently living human beings, in order to consolidate a permanent, worldwide British imperial rule. The present global banking crisis happens to be a convenient vehicle to conduct that mass murder.

This week's Almanac documents instances of British imperial genocide from history, instances which show that population control is at the dead heart of the British system of political economy.

British genocide in Ireland, Scotland and Africa

[Excerpted from "'Land Clearance' in the Murray-Darling Basin—British Genocide in the 21st Century", The New Citizen Dec 2010/Jan 2011]

Put yourself in the following situation: You are the imperial administrator of a subject country of your empire. The main agricultural crop consumed by the population of that country fails, and the people start to starve. They do actually grow enough other food to feed themselves, but that food is extracted as rent by their absentee landlords who live in your own imperial homeland. You enforce the extraction of food as rent, by deploying occupying troops to guard the transport against the starving people. Millions die of starvation and disease. In four years, the population collapses by one quarter. In response, you claim God is dealing with their "overpopulation problem".

Are you guilty of genocide?

The above is not a scenario; it is precisely what happened in the Irish Famine of 1845-1849 (see below). It is a case study of the British Empire using imperial economic policy, namely free trade, to exterminate millions of people. It then justifies that genocide by citing Parson Thomas Malthus' quack theory on population, that population growth will always outstrip food supplies—a "theory" which that Empire itself purposefully concocted as a rationale for genocide in the first place. (The administrator of Ireland was Sir Charles Trevelyan, a Westminster Treasury official, formerly of the East India Company, who, like virtually all civil servants of his generation, had been personally trained by Malthus at Haileybury College¹—the training centre established by the British East India Company, the largest private monopoly in world history.)

Right now, Australia is being targeted for genocide in a similar fashion: our domestic food supplies are being systematically shut down, while what remains is being seized by foreign interests. As the keystone to this plot, and as it did historically in its imperial "land clearances" in Ireland, Scotland, and Africa, for instance, the British Crown has enacted a plan to "clear" our national food bowl, the Murray-Darling Basin, of most of its food production and farming communities. That Murray-Darling "clearance", in turn, is the central thrust of a broader assault on food production and economic development in Australia, whose intent is to reassert complete British imperial control over a devastated nation of only 5-6 million human beings living in miserable conditions and serving as a slave labour force for mining companies and agricultural cartels. The Murray-Darling Basin clearance is presently only the most notorious example of the British intent to lock up most of Australia from agro-industrial development under one ruse or another, such as: taking vast swaths of land out of past or potential future production under the pretexts of ever-expanding "nature reserves", "Wild Rivers" and "wetlands" legislation, and "Aboriginal land rights" (though Aborigines themselves are invariably forbidden from developing their "own" lands); through the legal prohibition on farmers clearing brush from their own lands or of building dams on their properties, together with the governmental refusal to build public dams in an often drought-stricken country despite the existence of enormous water reserves; through the elimination of the single desk Wheat Board in the face of multinational domination of the grain trade, as well as the systematic driving down of "farm-gate" prices paid by the Woolworths/Coles cartel; through jacking the prices of cartel-produced fertilisers through the roof while shutting down any domestic fertiliser production; through the present general refusal by the banks to extend agricultural credit to often-desperate but otherwise credit-worthy farmers, and so on. In addition, "free trade", "competition policy", "deregulation", etc. have also savaged our agriculture, together with our once-proud industrial base.

The reality is this: the British Crown/City of London's globalist monetary system is now imploding, and in that position of strategic weakness they are determined to crush any possible reassertion of sovereignty by nations anywhere on the globe through such means as national banking, tariff protection, fixed exchange rates, agricultural self sufficiency and the other historic instruments of national-economic sovereignty. Central to this imperial strategy is just plain mass murder—the Crown has repeatedly, publicly asserted its intention to reduce the world's population from its present almost seven billion people down to less than two billion, and for Australia, to reduce the population of 22.5 million down to just five million.

Land clearances, tool of British genocide

What is happening in the Murray-Darling Basin today is nothing but the traditional British imperial policy of "land clearance", with its accompanying, intentional policy of mass murder against those human beings being so "cleared". Three historical examples of British genocide achieved through notorious "land clearances", that is, clearing the land of human beings, show how the process works: the cases of Ireland, Scotland and more recently Africa under the World Wide Fund for Nature.

Ireland

For 400 years, the British have perpetrated genocide against the people of Ireland to an extent unmatched anywhere in the world. This genocide was at its most intense during the century of the 1600s, and in the mid-1800s Irish Famine. The British motivation was to strengthen their imperial control, and their chief tool was land clearances.

Specifically, between 1580 and 1705, 80 per cent of all arable Irish land, that is, 12 million out of 15 million acres, was confiscated by English and Scottish landlords. Sir William Petty, the Surveyor-General of Ireland under Oliver Cromwell, who surveyed the lands confiscated for Cromwell's soldiers, pushed for Ireland to be a "small country and few people". He opposed urbanisation, and insisted on a "positive population policy" based on a "par" (balance) "between land and hands", in other words, a set number of people to work the land, with just enough left for the army, navy and priesthood. The Irish tenant farmers were treated no better than slaves, and virtually all of the corn, wheat, barley, oats, and meat they produced went to their landlords in rent, for free trade export, leaving only potatoes for consumption. Moreover, official British policy from the mid-1600s was to, in their words, "replant" Ireland with Englishmen of "superior breed" until Ireland had an English population of five million. Petty proposed a eugenics-style breeding system where the wealthiest and most beautiful women would breed with the "heroes" among English men, to produce large numbers of superior children to bring the English population of Ireland rapidly up to five million. That necessitated killing the Irish en masse, and that is exactly what happened. In 1652, when Oliver Cromwell invaded Ireland for the second time, 20,000 Irish subjects were slaughtered, 40,000 Irishmen were exiled to France and Spain, and 10-20,000 young Irishmen and women were shipped as slaves to the sugar plantations of Jamaica and Barbados. Sir William Petty recorded that more than half of the Irish population died, mostly of starvation and disease; the population density fell to 7-8 people per square kilometre. For his role in the project, Petty was rewarded with the single largest landholding in Ireland.

By the early 1800s, four million acres or 25 per cent of arable Irish land was unused for any purpose. In 1829 the famous Duke of Wellington commented that "there never was a country in which poverty existed to the extent it exists in Ireland." By the 1840s, Ireland had 164 miles of railways, compared to England's 6,621; it had 60 per cent unemployment, just 39 hospitals to serve eight million people, no more woolen, linen, poplin, furniture, and glass manufacture, and even the water-powered grain mills which Ireland had introduced to Europe 1,300 years earlier, had all disappeared. Seventy five per cent of the Irish were feudal tenants to British landlords.

In the years between 1845 and 1849, when blight destroyed the potato crop, Ireland's population collapsed from 8.1 million down to less than 6 million: 1.5 million people died from starvation or disease; 1 million emigrated, often forcibly, and of those, 500,000 died of disease in passage—Irish emigrants of the mid-1800s had a Stone Age life expectancy of just 13 years. Meanwhile, Britain maintained a huge export of oats, barley, corn, wheat, pigs, and meat from Ireland during those years, produced by starving tenant farmers, and guarded by British soldiers against starving crowds. The token famine relief provided by the British was in the form of public works for the destitute unemployed, but there was a catch: the public works that would have been the most useful to the starving population, which was the draining of bogs—today's Ramsar "wetlands"—to grow more food, was not allowed, nor was railway construction, and only roads were built instead, of which Ireland already had plenty.

In 1848, Ireland's British administrator, the Westminster Treasury Minister Sir Charles Trevelyan, credited God with the mass-deaths: "The problem of Irish overpopulation being altogether beyond the power of man, the cure had been supplied by the direct stroke of an all-wise providence," he said. However, the British Viceroy in Ireland, Lord Clarendon, who was forced to observe the situation up close, knew God didn't do it: he wrote to Prime Minister Lord John Russell—Lord Bertrand Russell's grandfather, "I don't think there is another legislature in Europe [other than the British] that would coldly persist in this policy of extermination." [emphasis added]

Scotland

Now let's look at Scotland: when you see on TV and in magazines pictures of the Scottish highlands, totally wild and barren, what you are seeing is a British oligarchical creation. In two shameful episodes in the 1700s and 1800s, the British oligarchy—English and Scottish aristocrats—cleared the Scottish Highlands of hundreds of thousands of Gaelic-speaking Scots. These "Land Clearances" as they were known were ostensibly to clear land for grazing sheep and cattle, and were conducted with a brutality that came from the British oligarchical view, typified by the Duke of Edinburgh today, that humans are livestock to be culled at will. But they were also conducted to destroy once and for all any Scottish resistance to the English imperial conquest known as the 1707 Acts of Union, by which Scotland and England were joined under a single imperial crown.

In many cases, the Highlanders were ordered to move from their homes to strips along the coast known as "crofts" that were unable to sustain the communities through agriculture, and told to become fishermen. The reluctant families would often be burnt out. Hundreds of homes at a time would be set alight, sparking chaos and panic as the families struggled to remove the sick and helpless and valuables before the fires reached them. It was common for families to be evicted at the rate of 2,000 families a day, but many starved and froze to death where their homes had once stood. The families that did move to the coast, dubbed "crofters" were forced to live in the harsh open until they built their new homes themselves. Cases have been recorded of conditions so harsh that while women worked, they were forced to tether their own children as well as their livestock to rocks and posts to stop them being blown over the cliffs. One member of the aristocracy active in land clearances, the Duchess of Sutherland, wrote in a letter to a friend in England, "Scotch people are of happier constitution and do not fatten like the larger breed of animals." [emphasis added]

The Highland clearances forced a mass emigration of Highlanders to North America and Australia and New Zealand, where today there are many more descendants of Highlanders than in Scotland itself.

Post-colonial Africa

And for those who would like to think that these atrocities reflect a long since abandoned, outmoded mindset of yesteryear, look at the work of Prince Philip's WWF in Africa and Asia. From 1961 until the present, Prince Philip's WWF has used conservation for animals as a cover to raise hundreds of millions of dollars, a substantial portion of which has financed the slaughter of human beings, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, and the sequestering of vast swathes of the African continent as "nature preserves".

The WWF's Operation Stranglehold, to allegedly save black rhinos in Zimbabwe from poachers, was involved in the killing of 145 so-called "poachers" between 1984 and 1991. Of the 84 poachers killed in the Zambezi Valley, most were shot from a helicopter paid for by the WWF and manned by WWF contract employees. In total, 228 poachers killed or taken prisoner; and a further 202 were recorded as having fled, some badly injured; however, of these, only 107 guns were recovered, which raised the question of whether they were poachers at all. Sources reported that several of the dead were associated with the military wing of the African National Congress. Another WWF operation, Operation Lock, which brought in ex-British SAS commandoes to fight "poachers", was implicated in agent

The science of genocide: Malthus and Darwin

[Excerpted from "Carbon Trading is Hitler-Style Genocide", The New Citizen, Aug/Sep 2009]

Parson Thomas Malthus, the first professor of political economy who taught a generation of British imperial administrators to proactively keep population growth in check, i.e. push policies to kill masses of people.

[T]he lie of "overpopulation", that the Earth has a limited "carrying capacity", was first cooked up by the Venetian intelligence agent Giammaria Ortes in the mid-to late 18th Century, in response to the rapid growth of the American colonies, their defeat of the mighty British Empire in the American Revolution of 1776-81, and their establishment of the first self-governing, republican nation state in the history of mankind. The Venetians, via their privately-run, usurious international monetary system, had ruled the world since around 1000 A.D.; over the course of the 17th and 18th Centuries, they spawned the British East India Company and the City of London as the new headquarters of that international Empire. Following Ortes' death, the British East India Company employee Parson Thomas Malthus plagiarised his argument that "food supply increases only arithmetically, while population increases geometrically", as the essence of his famous "scientific" essay of 1798, The Principle of Population. The British imperial stooge and nutcase Charles Darwin then applied Malthus' doctrine, first, to the animal kingdom: "the survival of the fittest" and then to human beings, founding the new science of "ecology"—a term coined by one of his followers in Germany.

To solve this alleged problem of "overpopulation", both Malthus and Darwin proposed genocide, just like that being advocated by today's environmental movement. Proclaimed Malthus:

"Instead of recommending cleanliness to the poor, we should encourage contrary habits. In our towns we should make the streets narrower, crowd more people into the houses, and court the return of the plague. In the country, we should build our villages near stagnant pools, and particularly encourage settlements in all marshy and unwholesome situations. But above all, we should reprobate specific remedies for ravaging diseases; and those benevolent, but much mistaken men, who have thought they were doing a service to mankind by projecting schemes for the total extirpation of particular disorders." (An Essay on the Principle of Population, Book IV, Ch.V, 5th Edition)

Back in America, Abraham Lincoln's economic adviser, Henry Carey, wrote that the East India Company, the greatest private monopoly in human history, had invented the lie of overpopulation, to cover for the devastating effects of their international system of free trade: "The impoverishing effects of the [British free trade] system were early obvious, and to the endeavour to account for the increasing difficulty of obtaining food...was due the invention of the Malthusian theory of population..." [Emphasis added]

In the wake of Darwin's Malthus-inspired, 1859 book, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life [emphasis added], British Crown Privy Councillor Thomas H. Huxley ("Darwin's bulldog"), Darwin himself, and his first cousin Sir Francis Galton, launched the "science" of eugenics—that in the harsh struggle for life, only the fittest race would survive. This Malthus/Darwin witches' brew captured the essence of the British oligarchy's view of mankind—as a human herd to be controlled by an elite, which would cull its ranks, or just plain kill entire "races", including the "lower orders" of the "white race".

The entire British establishment, led by luminaries such as Prime Minister Lord Arthur Balfour, Sir Winston Churchill, Lord Bertrand Russell, George Bernard Shaw, Cecil Rhodes, Fabian Society founders Sidney and Beatrice Webb, and H.G. Wells, embraced eugenics as their religious creed. And so did that establishment's creation, Adolph Hitler, who said, "Providence has endowed living creatures with a limitless fecundity; but she has not put in their reach, without the need for effort on their part, all the food they need. All that is very right and proper, for it is the struggle for existence that produces the selection of the fittest." (Hitler's Table Talk)

provocateur violence that stirred up conflict between the ANC and Zulus in South Africa, which killed thousands of black South Africans. In 1989, the WWF's "Year of the Elephant", funds raised for elephant conservation financed an elephant "rescue camp" in Uganda's "Mountains of the Moon" region on the Rwandan border, 1,000 miles from where the elephants actually lived, in Murchison Park. It was from precisely this WWF camp area that the Rwandan Patriotic Front invaded Rwanda a short time later, and conducted a systematic genocide unparalleled in postwar history.

Furthermore, the justification of "saving the animals" in Africa was a cynical fraud. In 1963 and in 1975, the WWF slaughtered thousands of African elephants in culls justified by claiming they were "overpopulated", but which were in fact eliminated to clear land for commercial investments by WWF directors. These scams were exposed by Irish filmmaker Kevin Dowling in his 1989 documentary Ten Pence in the Panda, following whose airing on British TV Prince Philip almost had a miscarriage.

Genocide in their own words...

"But bad times, you may say, are exceptional, and can be dealt with by exceptional methods. This has been more or less true during the honeymoon period of industrialism, but it will not remain true unless the increase of population can be enormously diminished. At present the population of the world is increasing at about 58,000 per diem. War, so far, has had no very great effect on this increase, which continued throughout each of the world wars.... War ... has hitherto been disappointing in this respect, but perhaps bacteriological war may prove more effective. If a Black Death could spread throughout the world once in every generation, survivors could procreate freely without making the world too full.... The state of affairs might be somewhat unpleasant, but what of that? Really high-minded people are indifferent to happiness, especially other people's."

-Bertrand Russell, The Impact of Science on Society, 1951

"You cannot keep a bigger flock of sheep than you are capable of feeding. In other words conservation may involve culling in order to keep a balance between the relative numbers in each species within any particular habitat. I realise this is a very touchy subject, but the fact remains that mankind is part of the living world.... Every new acre brought into cultivation means another acre denied to wild species."

-Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, Consort of Queen Elizabeth II of Great Britain

"In searching for a new enemy to unite us, we came up with the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortages, famine and the like would fit the bill.... But in designating them as the enemy, we fall into the trap of mistaking symptoms for causes. All these dangers are caused by human intervention and it is only through changed attitudes and behaviour that they can be overcome. The real enemy, then, is humanity itself."

-Club of Rome, The First Global Revolution, 1991

"Isn't the only hope for the planet that the industrialised civilisations collapse? Isn't it our responsibility to bring that about?"

-Maurice Strong, Secretary-General of the UN Earth Summit, June 1992.

"This is a terrible thing to say. In order to stabilize world populations, we must eliminate 350,000 people per day. It is a horrible thing to say, but it's just as bad not to say it."

-Jacques Cousteau, co-recipient in 1977 (with WWF co-founder Sir Peter Scott) of the International Environmental Prize awarded by the United Nations for outstanding contributions in the field of the environment. Quoted from UNESCO Courier, November 1991.

A "human way to reduce the population might be to put something in the water, a virus that would be specific to the human reproductive system and would make a substantial proportion of the population infertile. Perhaps a virus that would knock out the genes that produce certain hormones necessary for conception.... A triage approach will be necessary so that scarce medical resources go to those who can contribute most to the long-term viability of the planet. Consequently, many middle aged-to-elderly people will die uncomfortable deaths. Not every problem is solvable."

-Dr John Reid, neuroscientist and radical environmentalist, ABC radio interview with Robyn Williams, 10th December, 2006.
