Craig Isherwood webcast:

Australia's mission, in a Pacific-centred world

If it hit you that the unprecedented political events in Canberra in the last fortnight signaled a dramatic change in the political climate, tune in on Thursday night to watch Citizens Electoral Council leader Craig Isherwood's live webcast address, to see what's coming next.

The CEC National Secretary will speak on what must be Australia's Mission, in a rapidly-shifting world strategic situation, driven by the reality of the ongoing global economic breakdown crisis.

The recent political deadlock in Canberra reflects a worldwide pattern, in which national governments are being reshaped by a mass-strike among their populations, fueled by anger at the failure of political institutions to deal with the economic crisis.

Despite the best efforts of the British imperial architects of the globalisation policies that caused the crisis to keep globalisation going, through enhancing the powers of the IMF and G-20 and scamming the world into an international climate change treaty, the economic reality is forcing national governments to shift away from globalisation and adopt measures to ensure the common good of their people.

The most dramatic such moves have been among the Eurasian nations of Russia and China, as well as India, whose steps to forge a new economic path in cooperation with each other have shifted the strategic dynamic determining the world's future from the Atlantic region, to our own region, the Asia-Pacific.

In the light of this shift, what will Australia do? How will we choose, between the options of sticking with the disaster of British globalisation, and, as under Rudd, continuing to sacrifice our nation-state's welfare to British causes like free trade and climate change, or orienting ourselves to the clear intention by Asia's giants to develop their economies and raise their living standards, which opens up immense scientific, industrial and infrastructural development opportunities for Australia, far beyond our current colonial-like role of being a glorified quarry?

Craig Isherwood's webcast, address (10th December) is fundamental to Australia's survival, and future identity. Every Australian needs to watch it.

Beware the mass strike! ETS chaos reflects popular rage

The extraordinary chaos in the Parliamentary Liberal Party this week over the emissions trading scheme reflects the white-hot rage in the community at Canberra's b.s., Citizens Electoral Council leader Craig Isherwood noted today.

"Australia is witnessing a mass-strike uprising of the population similar to the United States, and that is what has caused the impasse in Canberra," Mr Isherwood said.

"It is great that Liberal Party MPs are opposing the Goldman Sachs ETS, but it is a joke to think they are doing it 'on principle'—they have no principles.

"These are many of the same MPs who destroyed Australia's economy through globalisation, free trade, financial deregulation, National Competition Policy, and the GST, which they happily rammed through in concert with the ALP over the population's wishes.

"So why are they standing firm on the ETS? Because this time, the Australian people are making it clear enough is enough—they are sick of the b.s., they are sick of the betrayal, they are sick of the lies that the economy is booming while they are on their knees, they see through the lies about global warming, and they are hammering their MPs with that message, so many of the Coalition MPs know their very political survival is at stake."

Mr Isherwood pointed out that the same Coalition MPs supported an ETS when they were in government under Howard in 2007, but the shift in public opinion has forced them to shift.

"The CEC, in conjunction with Lyndon LaRouche in the U.S., led the fight against Al Gore's lies, and destroyed the claim of 'consensus' on global warming—all now proven beyond doubt by the hacked emails from East Anglia University—which shifted public opinion.

"The Coalition MPs have simply jumped on the bandwagon, driven by the fear, expressed by Senator Ron Boswell, that otherwise they will be replaced by another political force, which means—forget Boswell's smokescreen about 'extreme right' and 'Hanson'—the CEC.

"Australians should be happy about what they are seeing in Parliament, because it means for once that their message is getting through; the ones who should be nervous are the ETS supporters in the Liberal Party and the Labor Party, who were conned into thinking they are hiding behind public opinion, because they are not—they are in for an almighty political backlash.

"Look at the incredible 20 per cent swings against the Democrats in New Jersey and Virginia on 3rd November, after just one year of Barack Obama—that is the mass strike political climate we are now in."

Mr Isherwood concluded, "The world is in a general economic breakdown crisis, and the people are feeling that, one way or another.

"Unless the political leadership and institutions of each nation address that reality, in a way that puts the general welfare of the people first, they are doomed.

"The CEC is leading the fight in Australia to force such a shift—I urge all Australians to join us."

Educating the Mass Strike: How the CEC defeated the ETS

Nothing “just happens”. As Shakespeare said, “There are occasions and causes, why and wherefore, for all things.” Last week’s extraordinary deadlock in the Liberal Party, and the resultant leadership change and Senate vote against the Rudd/Wong ETS bill, deserves special reflection as to what caused it, because it is revealing in terms of the current political situation, and also instructive to political activists, as a clear proof that we can change the system.

If anybody arrived in Australia for the first time this year, interested in the global warming debate, they might have concluded that the opposition to global warming alarmism and the ETS was being led by The Australian newspaper and Senator Barnaby Joyce. But cast your mind back to early 2007: Al Gore’s movie, An Inconvenient Truth, was in cinemas all over the world, and he’d just been awarded the Nobel prize and was about to win an Oscar. More than 80 per cent of the population of Australia didn’t necessarily believe in global warming, because they had no way of knowing, but they were terrified by it. The kingmaker of world politics, and the owner of the majority of Australia’s media, Rupert Murdoch, had just announced his own personal conversion from a climate change skeptic to a believer. And the Howard government, facing an election at the end of the year, had just appointed Peter Shergold to head an inquiry into the government’s response to climate change, which inquiry would later recommend an ETS, and which recommendation the Howard government would accept. With only one or two exceptions, all the now-famous climate change skeptics in the Liberal Party were reading the opinion polls, and lying low.

At a CEC National Conference in February 2007, U.S. Statesman and physical economist Lyndon LaRouche’s declaration of war on Al Gore and British genocide was high on the agenda. Emeritus Professor Lance Endersbee made a short but memorable appearance, and voiced his utter indignation as a scientist at the Al Gore claim that “the debate is over” on global warming. Following that conference, the CEC printed 540,000 copies of its New Citizen newspaper, with the blaring headline “Global Warming is a Fraud”. Page 3 of the New Citizen featured an article on “Why Scientists Lie”. The response was electric: terrified people were shocked that an organisation would just dismiss the whole claim of global warming, with such confidence.

In April 2007, the CEC began distributing enormous number of copies of the UK Channel 4 Martin Durkin documentary, “The Great Global Warming Swindle”. Later that month, the LaRouche Youth Movement intervened at the Fifth World Science Journalists Conference at Melbourne’s Grand Hyatt, and in the middle of the night slipped a copy of the New Citizen and DVD under the doors of all 700 rooms of the hotel. The next day, the conference was dominated by discussion about the paper and DVD, putting global warming zealots like Tim Flannery and Robin Williams on the spot, and beginning the drumbeat that eventually saw the ABC air the Swindle documentary in July, before a live studio audience dominated by members of the CEC and LYM, and viewed by 1.1 million Australians.

Next, we continued to hammer both the scientific fraud and genocidal agenda behind global warming in our regular email press releases, sent directly into hundreds of thousands of personal emails across Australia. The global warming issue determined the CEC’s Senate preferences in the Nov. 2007 federal election, when we said “the CEC would hold their noses and preference the Liberal Party... because at least an outspoken faction of the Liberal Party has exposed ‘global warming’ for the utter fraud it is”. In May 2008, we mobilised Australia to respond to the world food shortage, and exposed the ethanol fraud which is looting precious food production for so-called ‘renewable energy’. Radical greens like Clive Hamilton and John Quiggin started to denounce the influence the CEC and LaRouche have in the anti-global warming camp. This year, we repeatedly exposed the financial fraud behind carbon trading. The LaRouche Youth Movement intervened at Al Gore’s tin-rattling breakfast with Australia’s superannuation industry at Docklands in Melbourne in June, and in August we printed and distributed 350,000 copies of our New Citizen newspaper headlined, ‘Carbon Trading is Hitler-Style Genocide’.

The first concrete result of all this effort, was the opinion poll two months ago, showing that the number of people worried about global warming had fallen from 68 per cent in 2007, to just 48 per cent this year. On Nov. 12, the ABC’s Four Corners program asked a Liberal MP why the party had shifted from supporting an ETS, when they had their own proposal for one when they were in government back in 2007. He replied, honestly, that 2007 was an election year, and action on climate change was what the population wanted, but now public opinion has shifted, which is why the Liberal Party shifted.

That’s the final ingredient—the mass strike. There is universal rage at politicians, which some smarter Liberals have picked up on, and knew that this time, they would ignore it at their peril. The CEC’s role, was to educate that mass strike, which we must continue to do.
