And the winner is...

‘Overpopulation’: Dick’s Myth

The winner of the Citizens Electoral Council’s $1,000 Dick Smith bumper sticker competition is Paul Harry from Toowoomba, Queensland. Congratulations, Paul!

Paul’s entry, above, was chosen from among hundreds of entries, the very best of which made a short list that can be viewed on the CEC website.

Paul’s winning entry will now be made into a bumper sticker, and 5,000 copies will be distributed Australia-wide.

Isherwood/Smith correspondence

Following his donation of $500 to the bumper sticker prize money, and his correspondence with CEC leader Craig Isherwood over a potential public debate, Dick Smith went strangely quiet... until the end of last week.

In response to an email from Craig, which asked Dick, “Have you been told to shut-up?”, he replied that he hadn’t answered Craig’s previous email, because Craig hadn’t answered his earlier question, which was:

“Do you think there would be advantages from our population in Australia going to, say, 100 or 200 billion?”

Here is part of Craig’s reply:

“I don’t think there is any worry of that whatsoever, presuming that we as human beings act rationally. To put it in perspective, in 1963 Australia’s population reached 11 million and 46 years later (2009) it had doubled to 22 million. If we kept doubling at this rate, then we would hit 100 billion in 2568. But, you also asked me, in your email of 30 August, regarding a hypothetical 1 trillion Australians, “Are you seriously suggesting we would have already colonised other planets ad infinitum?” Yes, I absolutely am suggesting that we will have colonised at least some of the other uncounted hundreds of billions of planets out there; in fact, given the rather dicey prospects of mankind being limited to only one relatively vulnerable planet, this Earth, and the fact that the Sun is for sure going to blow up someday, we in any case have to get up off the Earth sometime. So let’s make a virtue out of necessity and start now, aiming toward a Moon-Mars colonisation program by the end of this present century. We not only have to do it, but we will receive enormous benefits from doing so. For instance, the U.S. space program of the late 1960s and early 1970s returned $10 for every $1 dollar spent on it, before it was irrationally shut down. But perhaps even more importantly, we will give our children, our grandchildren and generations beyond them the prospect of an exciting and noble future. Can you seriously say that children growing up today have any such exciting prospect?”

You can’t have it both ways, Dick. If you are indeed worried about the Earth becoming “overpopulated”, how can you not be in favor of actually solving the “problem”? Not by killing billions of people as Prince Philip and his Green hordes propose, but by taking the next giant leap for mankind, into the Solar System, on into the Galaxy and into the vast reaches beyond?

Isherwood: Reject Anglo-Dutch oligarchy's 'life' tax

No independent-minded Australian should take any notice of BHP Billiton CEO Marius Kloppers' call last week for what amounts to a tax on life, because it is not an Australian view, and not even a miners' view, but an imperial-style edict by the Anglo-Dutch financial oligarchy whom he serves, Citizens Electoral Council leader Craig Isherwood said today.

"It is time for Australia to be sovereign, and act in its national interest—the interest of the Australian people—and tell this Anglo-Dutch agent and his superiors to get lost, and take his tax and his company with him," Mr Isherwood said.

The CEC National Secretary explained that a so-called carbon price was a tax on the biospheric cycle central to the existence of all life:

"Scientific ignoramus characterise the biosphere as a mechanical system in some mystical state of 'balance', the computer models of which are being thrown out by an increase in atmospheric carbon dioxide," he said.

"In truth, the biosphere is a complex, dynamic system which governs and is governed by all life, through processes we understand as the interconnected cycles of water, nitrogen, and carbon etc.

"The carbon cycle is central to the biosphere: photosynthesis by green-leafed plants harnesses the power of the sun (in a way that solar panels could never match) to fix carbon molecules from carbon dioxide into the plant structure, which then becomes the basis of the food chain for all life forms, until through decay and excretion it returns to the atmosphere as carbon dioxide.

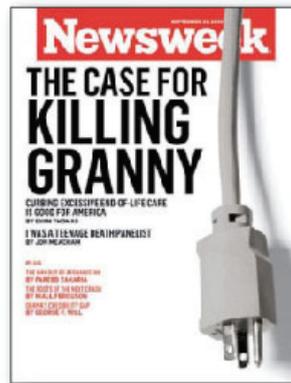

"To seek to take carbon and lock it away in fallaciously-named 'sinks'—as though the natural biogenic migration of the carbon atoms should be permanently halted—is to deny the biosphere the primary ingredient of its existence," he said.

Mr Isherwood went on, "The issue is not the 'science', which is rubbish, it's the political agenda—reduce the world's population.

"Since the emergence of the modern nation-state as a form of government determined by its people, and committed to the general welfare of its people, the European-based oligarchy, centred in the financial and raw materials conglomerates of the City of London and Amsterdam, have sought to destroy it.

"In 1961, two scions of that oligarchy—Britain's Prince Philip and the Netherlands' Prince Bernhard—established the World Wildlife Fund as a vehicle to subjugate national sovereignty to a revival of the Darwinian race science of eugenics; made notorious by the Nazis, eugenics was re-packaged by the WWF's founders, which included Eugenics Society president Julian Huxley, as 'environmentalism'.

"As Prince Philip repeats ad nauseum, this crowd wants to cut down the world's population, and by denying human beings involvement in the carbon cycle they will kill tens and hundreds of millions of people and do just that."

He concluded, "BHP Billiton is the jewel in the crown of the Anglo-Dutch oligarchy and its raw materials cartel. If Australia listens to them, we are kissing the butts of genocidalists, and that's not a good thing to do."

To compare the CEC's record to that of the growing chorus of leaders, including PM Julia Gillard, who claim that nobody could have seen this crisis coming.
