Soros escalates 'war for dope' down under

Billionaire British agent George Soros is targeting Aussie kids in his war for drugs, deploying legalisation point-man Ethan Nadelmann to Australia to further his strategy to make changes in Australian drug laws a precedent for legalising dope in the U.S.

Australian parents desperate to save their teenagers from ruined lives as doped-up zombies, will get a kick in the guts today, when Nadelmann, the director of Soros's Drug Policy Alliance, gets a national audience at the National Press Club in Canberra—sponsored by the National Australia Bank.

Back in 2002, Washington-based Drug Policy Alliance spokesman Robert Sharpe admitted to The West Australian's Norman Aisbett (30th November, 2002) that their strategy was to use Australia as a stalking horse for drug legalisation in the U.S. "From a selfish perspective of wanting to change US drug laws, we need reform in Australia ... to help us pressure our legislators, while also believing it's right for Australians ... [I]f Australia were to dramatically change its drug laws, it would be all over CNN and would impact the debate in the US so much more."

Drug legalisation is aimed at destroying the sovereignty and functionality of nation-states, by destroying the cognitive capabilities of their peoples. Lawfully, given the history of the 19th century Opium Wars between China and Queen Victoria—when the Crown invoked the principle of "free trade" to militarily force China to open its ports so its population could be doped out by British opium—to this day the drug legalisation agenda is run top-down by the British Crown, through right-wing "free market" think-tanks controlled by the Crown's Mont Pelerin Society, and, principally, through their one-man nation-wrecker, George Soros.

Kicked off with funds from the highest echelons of the City of London, specifically the Rothschilds, and supervised by Britain's Lord Malloch-Brown, Soros has waged economic warfare, financed social insurrection and pushed dope legalisation all over the world on behalf of the British Crown.

His most significant recent accomplishment was the election of U.S. President Barack Obama, whom Soros financed from an unknown to pinch the Democratic Party nomination. Obama has done the British bidding on everything, from bailing out Wall Street to imposing a British-style rationed health care system to kill people in the name of balancing the budget; in terms of drugs, he changed U.S. policy in Afghanistan to align with British policy, and ordered U.S. troops to protect the opium crops that flooded the world with heroin and financed Saudi-linked terrorism—only the furious reaction of members of the U.S. government and the Russian government forced Obama to back away from this British policy.

In Australia, Soros is already responsible for an epidemic of drug abuse among youth. His "harm minimisation" agenda, which condones drug use, was adopted by the Australia's premier drug abuse charity, the Australian Drug Foundation, founded in the boardroom of the ANZ bank, which, backed by Soros and funding from the elite of Australia's banks, corporations and private family foundations, achieved the widespread adoption of harm minimisation as policy by Australia's government departments, and social organisations such as the Australian Football League (AFL).

There is a high-level, protected entanglement between Australia's illegal drug trade, and the political economic system:

Australia's banks are making a fortune from illegal drugs, by holding billions in black money, estimated by the Australian Federal Police a decade ago to be at least $7 billion; under legalisation, the dope trade will expand exponentially, as will the drug cash flows through the banks;

The most serious investigation into drug trafficking in Australia, the early-1980s Costigan Royal Commission, which turned up connections to some of Australia's political and corporate elite, was shut down by the Hawke government, and its relevant findings sealed.

The Crown's own charity in Australia, the Queen's Trust, was a major financial sponsor of the drug legalisation activities of the Australian Drug Foundation.

Citizens Electoral Council leader Craig Isherwood today called for Soros's drug legalisation agenda and the whole illegal drug scene to be cleaned out from Australia.

"It's time to get rid of these dope-pushers, for our kids and for our nation," he said. "And instead of offering that dope-pushing scum Nadelmann the podium at the Press Club, he should be run out of the country."

Every Monday the CEC posts a Weekly Update with Robert Barwick to its website. Watch the October 30 report for a full briefing on how the 2007 Water Act has already enshrined into law the cuts to irrigators' water which the MDBA is purporting to "consult" the community about. Also covered, is the real story behind Joe Hockey's call for bank regulation. The debate is really all about LaRouche.

To compare the CEC's record to that of the growing chorus of leaders, including PM Julia Gillard, who claim that nobody could have seen this crisis coming.

Brits demand end of sovereignty—for Ireland and the world

Ireland's financial crisis is a battle for national sovereignty. The City of London and its Inter-Alpha Group of Banks is strangling Ireland, to force the Irish government to take over the debts of the private banks, including Inter-Alpha's own Allied Irish Banks. British and Inter-Alpha Group banks have massive investments in the Irish banking system; Britain in fact uses Ireland as its "offshore base" in the Eurozone. Until today, the Irish government has refused to bail out these private banks, but the pressure is crushing.

What's at stake?

The entire global financial system: The illusion of a "recovery" since September/October 2008 has depended entirely upon governments taking over the banking system's gambling losses, and pushing the burden of those losses on to the public. The people of Europe and the U.S. have suffered under brutal austerity cut-backs, so the banks could keep trading their derivatives and chalking up paper profits. If governments didn't bear this burden, the private banking system would vaporise.

Ireland's refusal—until now—to toe the line, threatens this entire global bailout arrangement.

London's 15th November The Telegraph reported, "The veteran Conservative MP Peter Tapsell warned that the 'potential knock-on effect' of the Irish crisis 'could pose as great a threat to the world economy as did Lehman Brothers, AIG and Goldman Sachs in September 2008.'" Thus, a "financial hit squad"—as the London Guardian put it—of the European Central Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and the EU Commission, has flown to Dublin to scrutinise the banks' books and eventually cram a bailout down the throat of Irish government leaders. The British government has agreed to participate in the bailout, and a figure of 100 billion euros is being discussed. However, this might not be enough, given the ongoing run on Irish banks by corporate investors.

Furthermore, the Greek crisis is sharpening again. Austria has just suspended aid contributions to the Greek bailout financial packet agreed to last May, because Greece has failed to meet the tax revenue targets agreed to under the EU Memorandum.

Credit default swaps (CDSs) on Greek debt yesterday rocketed 97 basis points to 950; a Greek default would trigger $300 billion worth of CDS contracts.

British imperial outlets have been clear about their intentions in the "Irish crisis": use Ireland as a guinea pig to destroy national sovereignty, in order to impose fascist looting to bail out their Inter-Alpha system. ECB head Jean-Claude Trichet earlier this week called it the end of the "Westphalian system" (of international law based on national sovereignty); today, the same line comes straight from London:

"A full EU-IMF bail-out would mean Ireland losing key areas of political and economic sovereignty", The Telegraph wrote on 17th November: "This would be deeply controversial," they admit, but it must be done. The flagship London Economist similarly says that the purpose of the bailout of the Irish banking sector is to "make it sturdy enough for some of Ireland's banks to be bought up by foreign ones." This can be disguised with different names to allow Ireland "to claim that it has not (yet) abandoned Ireland's hard-won sovereignty," the Economist proposes, only to rub salt in the wound: This "may highlight the involvement of a country that is in the EU, but outside the euro zone: Britain, the old coloniser."

This week, Lyndon LaRouche urged Ireland to stand firm, and let the Inter-Alpha Group go bankrupt: "What the British have done, is they've set up a big gamble, under which the Inter-Alpha banks are to be bailed out. The Inter-Alpha Group is now potentially bankrupt. If they don't get this 'Irish' bailout through the EU, they're in trouble. That's the reality ... They took the big gamble; it's their responsibility... So therefore they are really desperate. That's why British PM David Cameron is on the line all the time with Ireland, trying to hound them into submission.

"The British system is obviously bankrupt: they are in desperate straits ... We hope that people aren't stupid enough to bail them out. Let them go bankrupt: it will be the best thing for them and for the world ... This thing is a blowout of the whole damned world system. We are the only ones who are pushing the solution."
