Isherwood:

Australian food production is a national emergency

The stepped-up onslaught of British free trade and green fascism on Australian food production is crushing the family farms and small businesses that provide Australia's food security, leaving Australia facing a national food emergency, declared Citizens Electoral Council leader Craig Isherwood today.

"Australian food production is under attack on all fronts," Isherwood said, noting in particular the cases of the Murray-Darling Basin, the Coral Sea marine park, the cattle industry, and foreign corporate buy-ups:

Water Minister (and Wilderness Society zealot) Tony Burke's determination to ram through the Murray-Darling Basin Authority Plan is crippling Australia's most important region for food production. The MDBA Plan is setting the banks loose to mass-foreclose on farms and businesses across the Basin [Go online to read more: http://cecaust.com.au/main.asp?sub=releases&id=2011_12_05_Burke_Lied.html], forcing the farmers to sell their water "voluntarily" to the government, to meet the demands of the Ramsar Convention cooked up by Prince Philip's World Wildlife Fund (WWF) and International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN).

The impending lock-down of one million square kilometres of the Coral Sea from fishing, along with other areas of southwest and northwest Australia and South Australian waters, will smash the nation's fishing industry [Go online to read more: http://cecaust.com.au/main.asp?sub=releases&id=2011_06_15_Marine_Parks.html]. Tony Burke acknowledged on the 5th December 2011 ABC TV 7.30 program that the lockdown was pre-emptive, because fishing hasn't damaged the Coral Sea: "We're not going to wait for everything to be endangered... We will end up with the largest area in the world having a significant level of protection." The lock-down was demanded by an eco-fascist alliance dominated by the British Crown's own Australian Conservation Foundation, WWF, Wilderness Society and the Nature Conservancy, and including the oil industry-funded Pew Environment Group. The Coral Sea marine park and others planned in Australian waters, effectively locks down most of Australia's fisheries, and means that Australia accounts for an incredible 45 per cent of all marine protected areas in the world, all the while importing fish from much poorer nations such as Thailand.

The carnage in Australia's cattle industry following last year's live export ban to Indonesia [Go online to read more: http://cecaust.com.au/main.asp?sub=releases&id=2011_06_10_Live_Export.html], was credited to the fruit-loops in Animals Australia, but was actually orchestrated by the British Crown's economic hit-man George Soros (whose Quantum Fund boasts the Queen as one of its 99 exclusive investors) through his Australian front GetUp. Similar to the MDB, the short-lived ban has been enough to unleash the banks to foreclose on the heavily-indebted cattle producers, which even includes the Mayor of Richmond in North Queensland. Following Indonesia's announcement that it is halving its import quota from Australia, many hundreds of cattle producers are in crisis.

Corporate and foreign agribusiness is snapping up prime Australian farmland and food production infrastructure at an increasing rate, and the flagships of the Anglo-Dutch raw materials cartel—the Queen's own Rio Tinto, BHP Billiton and Xstrata—are being allowed to elbow food production aside as they strip-mine Australia for coal.

"Free trade and green fascism are British imperial inventions that have crippled industries and the nations that depend on those industries, forcing the world into the City of London-dictated imperialism of globalisation", Isherwood said.

"To maintain imperial control as globalisation implodes, the British Crown has put its genocidal population-reduction agenda into overdrive, and Australia's food producers are right in the firing line."

Isherwood called on all Australians to join the fight to save Australia's precious food industries.

"This fight is not about businesses being successful; it is about defending the right of human beings to exist", he said.

"The CEC stands for protection and parity pricing for agriculture, a national bank to direct credit to expand production, and economic development projects in water, transport and energy infrastructure to reverse the green drive to turn Australia into desolate wilderness. We can then achieve Australia's potential as a food bowl for the world."

Mossad Chief:

Nuclear Iran is not 'existential' threat to Israel, global economic crisis is

The current head of Israel's Mossad intelligence agency has pulled the rug from under the chest-thumping Israeli neo-cons who are in league with the British and Obama to attack Iran and/or Syria in order to orchestrate a third world war.

According to sources quoted in the 29th December Haaretz, Mossad chief Tamir Pardo told an audience of Israeli diplomats that a nuclear Iran was not necessarily an existential threat to Israel. This view contrasts with the constant braying of neo-con nutcase Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, that a nuclear Iran will lead to another holocaust, which is the view that dominates the Australian news media.

Pardo reportedly made his comments in a closed forum of 100 Israeli ambassadors on 27th December. According to Haaretz's diplomatic sources, Pardo said that Israel was using various means to undermine Iran's nuclear program, but questioned the use of the term "existential threat" if Iran were to become a nuclear power.

"What is the significance of the term existential threat?" Pardo is reported to have asked. "Does Iran pose a threat to Israel? Absolutely. But if one said a nuclear bomb in Iranian hands was an existential threat, that would mean that we would have to close up shop and go home. That's not the situation. The term existential threat is used too freely." Pardo did not comment on the possibility of an Israeli military strike against Iran.

According to the sources, Pardo saw the European and world economic crisis as a more serious immediate threat. While devoting five minutes in his presentation to the Iranian threat, Pardo spent no less than 20 minutes on threats to the Israeli economy.

There is reportedly an all-out brawl within the Israeli military-security establishment over plans by Defense Minister Ehud Barak and Netanyahu to launch a preemptive attack against Iran. Pardo's predecessor Meir Dagan has been taking the point against Barak and Netanyahu, and last month said Israel should only resort to military force "when the knife is at its throat and begins to cut into the flesh", warning that their drive for a war could drag Israel and the entire region into a major war that would be disastrous.

The Great Wipeout of 2011 is just the beginning

Pardo was right to recognise the existential threat facing Israel—and the world—is the global economic collapse. The financial body count of 2011 is horrific, but 2012 is going to be even worse. US$6.3 trillion in assets were wiped out on global stock markets in 2011—a loss of 12.1 percent, according to the January 1 Financial Times. But these losses, as dramatic as they were, are barely the beginning of the blowout to come in early 2012. In the first quarter of the year alone, the countries of the Eurozone will be facing 457 billion euros in sovereign debt rollover, with Italy alone scheduled to pay 113 billion euro. This is impossible, especially with Italy paying more than 7 per cent yields on 10-year bonds at the auction last week.

Sources at one of the regional Federal Reserve banks in the United States have just completed a study for internal circulation, indicating that in what is still the world's biggest economy—upon which China depends for its growth and Australia for virtually its entire income—the housing collapse continues unabated, real unemployment is at the worst of the Great Depression levels, inflation is far greater than the official government claims, and manufacturing is at the same level of collapse as in September 2008, at the time of the Lehman Brothers blowout.
