Fight the WWF drive to destroy the beef industry

Remember when we all used to sing “God save the Queen”? Well, wipe that sentimental tear from your eye, because she and her ghastly husband have unleashed terror on the beef industry.

The World Wildlife Fund (WWF) has teamed up with McDonalds, Cargill and JBS to destroy the beef industry, under the guise of the fraud of “sustainability”. Sustainability is a rubbish concept, which in truth should be termed “less sustainability”. It rests on the myth of the “balance of nature”, a lie concocted to push the false belief that nature exists in a mechanical balance, which human beings—separate from nature according to greenies—disturb with their industry and development. (See the CEC’s DVD Ecosystems: A Genocidal Fraud.)

The WWF, which pushes this nonsense, is a British Crown creation. It has one agenda: the depopulation of the human race. Its Royal overlords don’t care a hoot about endangered wildlife. In 1960, just months before Prince Philip started the WWF in 1961, he and the Queen enjoyed a tiger hunt in India; he even horrified onlookers by shooting an extremely rare, baby black rhino! Prince Charles, who talks to plants and once desired to be a tampon, has now followed his father as President of WWF-UK. His two sons have been drawn into the family traditions to the extent that Prince William’s present to Prince Harry for his last birthday was hundreds of grouse to be blown to kingdom-come in a bird hunt on the Queen’s Sandringham estate. The King of Spain, Juan Carlos, doubtless some kind of cousin to the British Royals, is President of WWF España. Last month he broke his hip... on an elephant hunt in Botswana! While the Royals are hunting endangered wildlife, it is their WWF that is terrorising ordinary citizens for growing food.

What the Royals are obsessed about, is population control. Prince Philip expressed his personal desire on this matter in 1988, “In the event I am reincarnated, I would like to return as a deadly virus in order to contribute something to solve overpopulation.” The Duke wasn’t just mouthing off: that same year he was on a Royal Tour of Australia, and at the Walter and Eliza Hall Institute in Melbourne, when he was shown scientific experiments to develop a malaria vaccine, he reacted angrily and castigated the scientists, for contributing to “overpopulation” in Africa.

The WWF-spawned green movement is terrorising industry all over the world. But the people in industry, including cattle producers, have to understand, that their enemy isn’t the deluded ferals and vegans and eco-warriors. Those nutters wouldn’t have any clout at all, were it not for the fact that their movement was created and continues to be funded and controlled by the British Royal family and their corporate lackeys in the City of London.

Under Prince Philip’s leadership, the WWF has unleashed green fascism all over the world, and left industrial collapse and death in its wake. The WWF’s Australian sister organisation, the Australian Conservation Foundation, also created and run by Prince Philip, spawned:

* The Wilderness Society, which has led the push to force much of Australia back to wilderness, by locking down huge swathes of Australia's land in national parks and nature preserves; for example, Queensland's Wild Rivers law was a deal between Anna Bligh and the Wilderness Society.

* The Greens political party, whose media-sponsored rise to power in parliament enabled them to dictate the carbon tax.

* Sustainable Population Australia, which openly demands population reduction in Australia (of all places), through measures like a Chinese-style one child policy.

* The Wentworth Group of Quack Scientists, Tim Flannery's gaggle which formed in 2002 to combat the CEC's ideas of large water development projects to drought-proof Australia, and has led the push to smash food production in the Murray-Darling Basin.

If you want the undeniable details, read the Citizens Electoral Council's Oct./Nov. 2011 New Citizen, especially "The WWF: Race Science and World Government"; and "Heil Philip: How the Royals created the Australian Conservation Foundation to unleash green fascism".

Target: livestock production

The green fascists have long been gunning for livestock production. The climate change hoaxsters have demonised the beef industry as the single biggest source of greenhouse gas emissions. In 2006, a U.N. Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO) report entitled "Livestock's Long Shadow—Environmental Issues and Options", screamed that rearing cattle produces more greenhouse gases than driving cars. Animals Australia, whose hatchet job last year on live beef exports to Indonesia did so great damage to the industry, is less committed to animal welfare than their actual agenda of pushing for everyone to become vegetarians. And the green quacks at the CSIRO published a book by Julian Cribb in 2010, "The Coming Famine: The global food crisis and what we can do to avoid it", which singled out livestock production as the major driver of global warming and environmental problems, and ended virtually every chapter with an admonition to "eat less meat".

Why are McDonalds, Cargill and JBS joining forces with the WWF to destroy beef production? Are they idiots? On one level, yes, but they don't intend for it to affect their profits. There will always be beef production—the Royals and their elite corporate hangers-on aren't vegetarians, they are hypocrites—but a beef industry which provides high-quality affordable protein for the majority of the people will be a thing of the past. McDonalds will still make billions by churning out junk food, and Cargill and JBS will still screw producers to boost their profits, but they will cripple the independent family operators who are the backbone of the industry.

Feed the world

The beef industry must fight this insidious infiltration by the WWF, but at the same time, beef producers must understand what they are fighting for. This fight is about the right to make a living, but it is fundamentally much bigger than that. It is a fight for the right of people to exist, and to produce the food and fibre that support that existence.

The CEC is leading the fight to expose and stop the green agenda of industrial destruction, and return government policy to a focus on industrial development. Australia needs to develop. Projects such as the Bradfield Scheme water diversion scheme in North Queensland, the Clarence River Scheme in NSW, the 2nd stage of the Ord River project in WA, and Professor Lance Endersbee's Melbourne to Darwin fast freight railway, are crying out to be built. They will boost Australian productivity exponentially, and turn our nation into a food bowl that can feed hundreds of millions of people around the world.

The CEC has drafted legislation for a government-owned national bank, which can easily finance these projects. This is how to reindustrialise and revive Australia, and free us from the suffocating control of the Crown's green fascism.
